1.2. Details of the Proposal

The IMO states that when deciding how to assign Certified Reserve Capacity, it relies on information provided to it by the Market Participants who apply for that Certified Reserve Capacity.

In order to make its decision making processes more robust, the IMO considers that it should continue to seek more comprehensive information from Network Operators in relation to applications for Certified Reserve Capacity. Specifically, the IMO needs to

- Confirm that the information provided to it is complete, accurate and up to date and
- Be provided with any other information that they have in the possession of Network Operators, that they are relevant to the application for Certified Reserve Capacity.

The IMO recognises, however, that the information provided by the Network Operator may be confidential and commercially sensitive. It therefore
